

St. Thomas Lenasia

29th Sunday Ordinary Time

21st October 2007

I.T. WANTED

The admin section & various departments of the Archdiocese offices count 28 computers, which all work independently from one another. As a result, lots of duplicate work, lots of miscommunication, lack of support, individual snail Internet connections, etc.

Quotations from professional IT companies to link those computers in a network are way above what the Archdiocese can afford. The Archbishop is convinced we could do the job internally at minimal costs.

Your parish priest has been approached for help... and has accepted the challenge! Of course he knew that St. Thomas has quite a number of IT specialists. He would like to have a team of three or four to survey the present situation, make proposals and budgets, and actually do the job. Please contact Father if you can help. You need to have knowledge and experience of networking. A knowledge of Windows and Linux technologies is essential as well. This is an urgent project. Lenasia, OYYYYEE!

During the month of October, there will be a second collection for the Pontifical Missionary Society.
